Richard Pembleton, 20th Force Support Squadron community readiness specialist, briefs a Smooth Move class about what to expect during a move to a new duty station at Shaw Air Force Base, S.C.. The Smooth Move class provides individuals with information as well as representatives from various base agencies who can help them during a permanent change of station, retirement or separation. (U.S. Air Force photo by Senior Airman Destinee Sweeney)

A&FRC HELPS SMOOTH TRANSITIONS

The Airman and Family Readiness Smooth Move class is aimed to remove some of the stressors of moving by providing information to Team Shaw Airmen and families before their transition to a new duty location, retirement or separation.

During the class, Airmen receive goody bags filled with information pamphlets and briefings from housing, finance, the transportation management office, the school liaison officer, the Exceptional Family Member Program and others who can provide insight about factors to consider and how their respective units can help.

Richard Pembleton, 20th FSS community readiness specialist, said the key to having a smooth move is preparation, which the class can assist with by providing an avenue for people to ask questions and learn about helping agencies.

Smooth Move is part of the overall A&FRC relocation program, which also assists individuals arriving to Shaw through programs like Right Start. For more information contact the A&FRC at (803) 895-1253.
